Dave chose to partner with Drew League because of their shared missions to provide opportunities for young people to succeed and give them the tools they need to create change in their lives. While The Drew League levels the playing field on the court, Dave is leveling the financial playing field for millions of underserved Americans across the country.

Dave Founder and CEO, Jason Wilk, said, "As a Los Angeles-based company, Dave and Drew League share a passion for improving our local community and improving access to opportunity on and off the court."

Drew League commissioner, Chaniel Smiley said, "The Drew League has been creating opportunities for emerging basketball talent in South Central Los Angeles for 50 years and we're proud to partner with Dave this season and next. Dave and Drew League have a shared passion for improving this community, while increasing access and visibility for all."

Crossovr Collective Co-Founder, Steph Rawlins, The Drew League's media, marketing & brand agency who coordinated the partnership said, "Having a brand partner like Dave is really special and important, because not only do they see the value of the brand, but they also understand the importance of making sure local entities like The Drew are supported so that they can continue to exist, and be a staple to the community for another 50 years. Partnerships like this allow The Drew to expand their resources and opportunities it offers its youth, through the Drew League Non-Profit, the players and other members of the community."
